DIPPING INTO SCIENCE

The Source of Chalk Chalk is really skeletons of millions of tiny creatures that ot one time lived in the sea. All of their bodies, except the calcium carbonate, which what chalk really is, decayed and passed away, but carbonate remained through all time. Chalk cliffs seen in England and France today then were one time sea beds.

Have you ever taken the time to analyze the long string of workers as they came pouring out of the factory gates? Have you ever noticed how many in that line were crippled; men who have been unfortunate in life, but forced to carry on though their bodies may be maimed and broken on the whoel.

Did you ever stop to think about the man who is making life and its comforts possible for you? Have you realized that most of the men who head big industries today came up through the ranks and have never lost their great love for humanity?

Or have you been getting your viewpoint from the writers about "Main Street," who would have you "He's Going Around the World in This heart he is still the same "barefoot boy with cheeks of tan," of acting their pound of flesh; bent upon exting their pound of flesh; beat upon world's biggest industries, but down in his heart he is still the same "barewith others world have a with others their stating them up? Romance and Flowers in Long Association

In the development of gift-making in courtains a certain amount of romance centers around the flower. The flower is the gift of lovers, and in early Greek times a flower was worn as a sign of the engagement, the fullblossoming flower suggesting love awakened. The Polynesian men, as well as the women, wear flowers be-hind their ears when they are in love. The survival of another picturesque medieval custom centering around the flower is found in the bride's flower girls of today. In olden times these little girls, usually sisters, dressed ex-actly alike, carried garlands of wheat before the bride in the marriage pro-cession as a symbol of fruitfulness, and plenty. The very old and univer-sally observed custom of throwing rice after the departing bride and bridegroom as a symbol of a fruitful union had its origin with the ancient Persians. Rice has always played an important part in the marriage ceremony of these people, while the wheat shower, expressing the same sentiment, was common among the early Anglo-Saxons, and certain other people em ployed corn. Another interesting tra-dition regarding the rice shower is that rice was thrown after the bride and bridegroom for the purpose of giving food to the evil spirits that were believed to accompany newly married people, and that it was to appease these spirits that rice throwing originated.

Hawaiian Island Has Many Claims to Fame

Maul, one of the Islands of the Hawaiian group, has for its motto the phrase "Maul no ka oi," meaning "Maul the First." The Island authorities have just cited a number of historical facts in support of their brast. Maui has Haleakala, largest extinct volcano crater in the world, the scene in 1823 of the first Christian funeral of a Hawailan chieftain. The earliest island newspaper, as well as the first on the Pacific ocean, was published there in 1834. The paper was called Ka Lima Hawaii, meaning The Arm of Hawaii.

David Malo, earliest Hawaiian historian, was a Maui man. The island also had the first telegraph line strung between Haiku and Wailuku in 1878. The first Hawaiian wheat was planted at Makawao, Maui, in 1845, and not long afterward the first potato plan-tation was started at Kula, where tubers were raised for the California gold miners.

Oxygen in Air

Normal air contains about 21 percent of oxygen, says the United States bureau of mines. Man works best at this proportion of oxygen. A candle or oil flame will not burn in atmos-phere containing less than approximately 161/2 per cent oxygen, yet mun is sufficiently adaptable to get along fairly well in 17 per cent of oxygen. He will breathe a little faster and a little deeper. But most men cannot work in air with oxygen below 13 per cent, the point where an acetylene flame is extinguished by oxygen deficiency. In an atmosphere containing between 10 and 13 per cent oxygen, men become dizzy, pant, have a rapid heart beat, and often suffer from headache; 8 to 10 per cent usually produces unconsciousness and ulti-mately death.

Trollope's Cigars

Lord Birkenhead recently boasted a lifelong devotion to cigar smoking, but he can hardly claim to have given more thought and time to his hobby than did Anthony Trollope, remarks the Manchester Guardian. Trollope, as soon as his income was large enough to stand the expense, had one entire wall of his library equipped with air-tight little bins fitted with slid-ing doors and numbered. These he kept filled with choice cigars, laid across and across like planks of tim-ber, to get thoroughly seasoned. True to the Trollope tradition, he worked through the bins in methodical fash-ion, refilling each as it was emptied with special imports from Havana. Thus, he declared, he attained the most perfect smokes in the world.

Porpoise's Fish Appetite

. The porpoise has a great appetite, is feeding constantly as opportunity offers and lives principally on fish, and scientists were able recently to get a clew to the number of fish a lively porpoise may eat when a giant porpoise was caught and 15,198 otoliths were found in its stomach.

The otolith is the earbone of a fish, is very hard, supposed to be the last remnant of a fish that is reduced by the chemical process in the mammal's stomach, and the large number found may be far less than the number of fish served live and wiggling for the satisfaction of the porpoise. At any rate, it bids fair to hold first place

The Arabian Nights

The author of the original Arabic work, and the period in which it was composed, is unknown. But the Arablan Nights, as it stands at present, is the work of many hands, and numerous references in the stories show that they were added at different times. The work was introduced into tained in the latter part of the Seventeenth century, by Antoine Galland, a French traveler. It was first translated and published by him between 1704 and 1717.

fair and balmy, but noon comes and the sun is hot and blistering, and presently the afternoon creeps on and night approaches. The work drags, the body is weary. It takes courage and character to go on.

The great majority of business men fall at about fifty. They have found it easy work in the morning, but they give up in the afternoon. The world looks drab. "They see the gray rain over the waters," and they lose heart. I called on Grant last week. Forty seven he is, with an unusual mind and a fine training, and he has done a work in his profession, but the task has been very hard during the last few years. The afternoon faces him now. He has met a hard problem in life at a critical time and he seems unequal to it. All of his vivacity has gone out to him. He spends his days thinking, and his thoughts carry him nowhere. His friends try to cheer him, his family attempts to stimulate his interest in life, but he just cannot pull himself together. It is afternoon, the interest and the enpeared, the sun is climbing down the western sky; he knows that night is coming on and he shudders. (©, 1927, by Western Newspaper Union.)

SECRETARY HOOVER STATES AT

TITUDE TOWARD PRESIDENT Washington, D. C.—Sec'y Hoover, while with the-President at Rapid City, successfully blew up the levees which the extra Congress-session people have been trying to raise, demanding an extra session of Congress. Mr. Hoover, without mincing words or motions, declared the President was absolutely right that an extra session for flood relief would be apt to do more harm than good, and that the problem of flood relief was one of finance and engineering and not of politics. It was about time that this was said and Mr. Hoover, who has the greatest understanding as an enginegreatest understanding as an engine-ering observer of actual conditions of what is the right thing, was the one real man to make the statement.

AGRICULTURE

Dean W. C. Coffey of the University Department of Agriculture draws a striking picture of the changes which have taken place in farming. "Agriculture is now a complex industry and farming is regarded as a commercial enterprise," he says. "The farmer has much more responsibility in directing labor, handling money, and marketing products than he used to have. The efficient modern farmer is he agriculture of the earlier days. Dean Coffey takes an optimistic view of the situation, asserting that the standard of living is higher than it once was, and that the social life of the people is improving.

See that the cells of the radiator are not filled up with grasshoppers, bees, moths, butterflies and beetles caught on the fly and see that the hose connections are tight. Replace leaky hose at once and use white lead at the connections if tightening the clip does not stop the leak at this point. Take no chances when crossing desert country with water holes possibly fifty miles apart, but fill your radiator every time you stop for oil or gas—and carry a spare five gallons of water either in a can, ice-less refrigerator or water bag. Climbing mountains presents much the same problems as crossing the deserts and the best cars will be handicapped by boiling water on long, bad grades, negotiated in intermediate or low gears. It helps a lot, of course, if you have had the carbon removed before starting on the trip; and don't forget that driving in second gear with the spark fully advanced—provided your motor is properly timed—will heat the motor less than driving in high gear with a retarded spark.
